The name of 'England' comes from 'Angle-land'. The Angle and Saxon people* came here from Europe in the fifth and sixth centuries, and they called it Angle-land.

Before them, the Romans* lived here for about four hundred years. They made houses and roads. And they made a town next to the River Thames*, and called it Londinium. Today its name is London.

The Angles and Saxons came across the North Sea from north-west Germany and southern Denmark*. Later the Vikings* came from Denmark and Norway*.

In 1066, England had a new king. He was the famous William the Conqueror*. When he came to England, many French people came with him.

In the nineteenth century, thousands of Irish* people came to England and stayed here, and many Jewish* families came from Eastern Europe and Russia.

All through the twentieth century, people came to England and made a new life here. After the Second World War, many came from the West Indies*, Africa, and Asia. In the 1980s, people from Vietnam* came because they wanted to get away from the trouble in the country.

Today, about fifty-five million people live in England, and thousands more come and live here every year. Some are looking for work; some want to be with their families; others are looking for a better life. They bring with them their theater, food, music, and art.

第 12 問 次の文は日本人の海外旅行客に対するカナダ人の友人の意見を通して、筆者が感じたことが述べられた文章です。この文章を読み、右のページの設問(1)～(3)の答えとして正しいものを①～④から1つずつ選び、解答用紙にマークしなさい。

When I visited my Canadian friend in Vancouver, he said Japanese tourists* were strange* because they all visit the same museums, eat the same dishes in the same restaurants, and buy the same things in the same stores. He also said that Japanese tourists don't try to speak English or make friends with the local* people.

I don't agree, of course, that Japanese tourists are strange. But it's true that Japanese tend* to visit the same places, eat the same foods, and buy the same things in foreign countries. There are several reasons for this. One is that many Japanese travelers join package tours, so the places they visit and things they do are decided beforehand*. Even when Japanese tourists don't join package tours, they tend to use the same guidebooks, and go to the places recommended* in the guidebook.

After hearing my friend's opinion, I tried to avoid* places which were full of Japanese tourists, and tried going to places which local people often go to. Though I can't speak English well, people were much friendlier* when I tried to say greetings* or a few simple words in English. There is nothing wrong, of course, with appreciating* a country's art, food, and products. I realized, however, that the most important thing about a country is its people.

第 15 問 次の文章を読み、以下の設問に答えなさい。

A police officer was walking along the lonely street about ten o'clock at night. He tried doors as he went, and often turned back to see every corner of the street.

At about the middle of the block, the police officer suddenly began to walk slowly. There was a man in front of the door of a dark store. As the police officer walked up to him, the man spoke up quickly.

"It's all right, officer," he said. "I'm just waiting for a friend. We made an appointment* twenty years ago. Twenty years ago, this place was a restaurant, Big Joe's."

The man struck a match* and lit his cigar*. The light showed his face and hands.

"Twenty years ago tonight, I had dinner here with Jimmy Wells. He was my best friend. We were brought up* here in New York. The next morning I was going to start for the West to make much money. Jimmy stayed in New York."

"It sounds interesting," said the police officer. "Haven't you heard from your friend?"

"Well, yes, for a time we wrote letters," said the man. "But after a year or two we didn't know where the other was and what he was doing. But I know Jimmy will meet me here. He'll never forget. I came a thousand miles* to stand in front of this door tonight."

"You did very well in the West, didn't you?" asked the police officer.

"You're right! I hope Jimmy has done as well as me."

"I'll be on my way. I hope your friend comes around all right. Good night," said the police officer and walked down the street.

He waited about twenty minutes. Then a tall man in a long overcoat* hurried across the street.

"Is that you, Bob?" he asked.

"Is that you, Jimmy Wells?" cried the man in front of the door.

"It's Bob. I was sure I would find you here. The old restaurant was closed. We can't have another dinner there. How have you done in the West?"

“Great. It has given me everything. You’ve changed lots, Jimmy. Have you been doing well in New York?”

“I have a position* in one of the city offices. Come on, Bob. We’ll go around to a good place and have a good long talk.”

The two men started walking. At the corner there was a drugstore. When they came into the light of the drugstore, they looked at the other’s face at the same time. “You are not Jimmy Wells,” cried the man from the West. “Twenty years is a long time, but not long enough to change you so much.”

“It sometimes changes a good man into a bad one,” said the tall man. “The police in the West told us you would come. Come with me. Now, before we go on to the police station*, here’s a note for you. It’s from Inspector* Wells.”

The man from the West opened the note. The note was short.

Bob, I was at the place on time. When you struck the match to light your cigar, I saw it was the face of the man wanted in the West. I couldn’t do it myself, so I went around and got a plainclothesman* to do the job.
